Drafting Social Media and Social Networking Policies Back by popular demand

Friday, April 26, 2013 9am to 11am 1 Substantive & 1 Ethics credit Cost: $79

Continental Breakfast included

Social media and social networking is now a pervasive part of our social and business environment. But, what happens, for example, when multiple employees ask the same customer for a referral, burdening your customer relations? Or, when employees seek referrals from other staff and clients of your company, so that the employee can get a "better" job elsewhere? What is good for the employee goose, is not always good for the company gander...

This seminar is centered on creating and implementing proper administrative controls to manage the power of online social networking, so that the employees, as a team, are pulling in one direction for the good of the company. This exciting and timely course is for business people, entrepreneurs, HR professionals, attorneys and advisors who are responsible for aligning company goals with employee facilities and inclinations.

The seminar will cover

- online social/professional networking,
- issues with online social networking.
- practical solutions
- sample policies
- legal enforcement issues
- NLRB perspectives on employee rights
